Many believers do not understand the true substance of worship. This is to be directed to God alone, and the subject is God, not self. Many Psalms are excellent examples of worship. Note the expressions used, such as “magnify the Lord,” “sing His praises,” or those that deal with many of His great attributes (all-knowing, all-seeing, all-powerful, loving kindness, tender mercies, grace). One may truly worship in song if it is done with deep sincerity, from the heart, and not mindless repetition of familiar words. Worship is often mingled with thanksgiving in Scripture, but they are distinct from one another. Worship concerns who God is, in essence or actions He has taken. Thanksgiving is for blessings we receive. It would be well for all disciples to give close attention to the daily practice of worship. This can be done in private devotional times or spontaneous expressions of praise when God's blessings and providence become evident. This makes participation in corporate worship much easier. We do not have to “turn it on” one day a week. Private prayer begins with worship. Sufficient time should be devoted to worship. Quality should be improved by meditation on great Scripture worship passages, especially in the Psalms, like 103 and 139. Worship will be our eternal occupation, according to Scripture. It will center on the Son of God as the “Lamb freshly slain” for us, a constant reminder of how we came to be Heaven-bound.
